PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

I'm just running through a quick summary of what has been accomplished within the International Costumer's Guild this year. (Keep in mind this was written on the last day of 2007, at least a month before any of you will ever see it.)

Hopefully you already know most of what I'm about to recount either through reportage from your chapter reps to your chapters or through the newlists, archives, meeting minutes, etc. In the past some have felt left out of the workings of the ICG, which I feel may have been more a result of poor communication rather than intentional subterfuge. I believe that your chapter reps are doing a better job in keeping the membership informed than they have in the past. If you don't agree, then let someone know – your chapter rep, your chapter president, me; but let us know.

So what has happened this year? Big news, lots of plans set in motion, progress!

First, during the calendar year of 2007 the ICG gained five new chapters. That's right – five! Starting with the SouthEastern Costumers' Society right at the start of the year. They represent the SouthEastern United States and are based around Atlanta, Georgia. The Armed Costumers Guild was added at Costume-Con 25, based in Wisconsin. At the beginning of the summer we were joined by the Middle Tennessee Costumers' Guild from around Nashville. This fall the Denver Costume & Cosplay Society joined us as a chapter, and in December we added the Kansas City Costumers' Guild. These groups have each started small in their areas but I'm sure we'll see a lot of growth through them. They are in largely under-represented areas, thereby widening our network to include some places we've never had chapters before or were in previously but the chapters declined.

Their representatives have joined us on the Board and are already jumping in to contribute to the mix of ideas. So now that we have lots of new folks, what do we have to offer them that's new? A little thing called the International Costumer's Gallery, found at <http://www.costume.org/gallery2/main.php>. Have you checked it out? Since its summer launch we've been gradually adding more content from the Pat & Peggy Kennedy Memorial Library (AKA – ICG Archives) as well as encouraging individuals to add their own costume photo albums to the site. There are currently over 3,600 photos available for viewing and much more will be added. So go and look, and maybe create some albums of your own shots.

Even if you don't want to add your own photos, please consider sending copies to the Archives. It is our hope to accumulate a vast variety of images and costuming related books or videos, particularly from areas or conventions that we haven't gotten much from before. And if you don't contact them, don't be surprised if you hear from one of our Archivists or Archive representatives inquiring about events from your area. Maybe you'd rather beat them to the punch? They'd love to hear from you.

Those are the big things. There are other items still in the works which should come to fruition in the next few months; stay tuned for announcements from the ICG Board of Directors (your representatives).

So the Board has been hard at work to better the ICG as well as have regular lives, family stuff and jobs, not to mention some random costuming. I'm sure many of them are hard at work on things for Costume-Con 26 as you read this. Cause it's only... how many months/weeks/days away?

Nora Mai, ICG President

Steampunk: The Next Costuming Wave?

Part 2: An Outsider's Observations

by Bruce Mai

Tacking the word "punk" onto the end of a word has become a way to describe an attitude in much the same way "gate" (a la "Watergate") has been used as a shorthand association with scandal. Steampunk appears to be getting a lot more notice lately, possibly due in part to the increasing availability of Japanese anime with that thematic element to them. An online organized fandom has sprung just in the past two years and has rapidly blossomed. In an article by Alexander Kraft titled "Authority, Legitimacy and Voice: Defining Steampunk," said "...its themes of Victoriana, anachronism and technology seem to have struck a chord with an unusual number of people. As this fledgling community becomes a bona fide subculture, its participants have begun to struggle to define a subcultural ideology in an attempt to gain the status and legitimacy they seek in subcultural identification." Whatever that may entail, costumes and prop-making are the main ways this fandom expresses itself.

As more people with different backgrounds discover the genre, the term "Steampunk" is evolving into a catch-all for anything that looks anachronistic in design. Some devotees in the community make further distinctions with sub-categories including the following:

"Clockpunk" (anywhere from the Renaissance to somewhere into the 17th century). Tim Burton's "Sleepy Hollow" and Terry Gilliam's "Baron Munchausen." The devices used prominently display clockwork springs and gears.

"Dieselpunk" (post WWI to the 1950s or so). "Sky Captain and the World of Tomorrow" and "Dark City."

"Post-Apocalyptic Steampunk" Somewhat similar to "Rivethed," in that society has broken down and reverted to simpler, reliable steam power. Everything else is scavenged from the wreckage of the previous modern age. The French "City of Lost Children," or Anime "Lautu, Castle In the Sky." "Rivethed" - As quoted from Wikipedia, "The prime dress style of Rivetheds is inspired by military aesthetics, complemented by Modern Primitive body-modification (tattoos, piercings and scarification) or borrowed visual cues from Goths (mainly androgyny, fetishism and black hair dye), as well as oldschool Punk themes (such as the fanned Mohawk hairstyle, worn by Sascha Konietzko of KMFDM)."

A casual visitor to the community will notice a couple of things. First of all, the average age of Steampunk community members appears to be late 20s to early 30s. Second, they're noticeably more polite to one another than in some venues. The subject matter encourages this as much as anything. Because they're still a relatively small costuming sub-group, Steampunkers welcome outsiders. (It will be interesting to see whether civility survives as the community grows.) The two main venues where Steampunk community members gather are:

* The Steampunk Forum (<http://www.brassgoggles.co.uk/bg-forum/index.php>)
The site's tone is clearly slanted toward Victoriana, with the main topics organized into Tactile, Aural-Ocular, Geographical, categories, among others. Their threads go beyond just discussing costumes, into lifestyle, live steam machinery, the politics of the 19th century, just to name a few. If you're not prepared to spend a lot of time digging through the threads, it may be frustrating to find the information you want. With a little patience, though, there's a lot of worthy resources. About every 2 pages or so, you'll find pictures posted of people's costumes and props. The forum has more costumer photos posted in comparison to the Steam Fashion LiveJournal. Forum members' costume designs pretty much fall along the line of the site's Victoriana theme.

The Forum seems to attract a larger percentage of people who are willing roll up their sleeves and have a go at creating something challenging. According to the Kraft article, "tinkering, building, and modifying the artifacts and surroundings one interacts with to reflect a more 'steampunk' aesthetic are common, visible activities in the current steampunk scene." Completing a cool D.I.Y. (Do It Yourself) project and posting a picture of it to the Forum is a typical way to establish one's "street creds."
